November's Arrival

November crept quietly into the town, bringing a cool, gentle breeze and a sky wrapped in soft, grey clouds. The trees, once full of bright orange and yellow leaves, stood tall but shivered slightly as their last few leaves fluttered down to the ground. Each leaf danced and twirled, as if saying goodbye before resting on the earth below.

As the days grew shorter, the sun seemed to grow shy, hiding behind clouds and only peeking out now and then. The wind whispered secrets to the empty branches, carrying the scent of rain and cold air that made people pull their coats tighter.

One chilly afternoon, as dusk began to settle, the streetlamps blinked on, casting a warm glow along the pavement. The lights seemed to stretch and yawn, as if they too were preparing for the longer nights ahead. November smiled down on the town, bringing with it a sense of quiet and calm, letting everyone know that winter was just around the corner.
